PEOPLE ARE LIKE THAT

One of my neighbors, being hard pressed for money during the depression, was forced to sell her house in the country for an absurdly small amount, and move to the city where she hoped to find work. Her friends were all indignant with the new owner because they felt that he had taken advantage of her situation in buying the house from her for so little money.

After prosperity had returned to the country the new owner sold the house for three times what he had paid for it. Instead of pocketing all the profits, however, he sent half to the woman who sold him the house for so little. People are like that!

Ann Cattell.
